[8] The process is not arbitration (see Brassey Employment and Labour Law, volume 3, R51/2000 at A4; 63 for a contrary view) because, as the commissioner correctly observes (paragraph 69, page 54), there is no reference to arbitration in the LRA. The commissioner is required to "establish picketing rules" and not issue an award with brief reasons.

Arbitration, in the context of United States law, is a form of alternative dispute resolution. Specifically, arbitration is an alternative to litigation through which the parties to a dispute agree to submit their respective positions (through agreement or hearing) to a neutral third party (the arbitrator(s) or arbiter(s)) for resolution. In practice arbitration is generally used as a ...
